Peck may win the Oscar

By BARRY K. AUSTIN

HOLLYWOOD. AFTER seeing Gregory Peck in the world premiere of "The Paradine Case," I have no doubt that he will be voted "Best Actor" of the year. With two hit performances in a row, in "The Paradine Case" and "Gentleman's Agreement," he can't miss.

Taken from Robert Hitchens' brilliant novel, "The Paradine Case" has most of its action in the Old Bailey, which has been faithfully reproduced by Selznick. Gregory Peck plays Anthony Kerner, KC, defence counsel in a murder trial who falls in love with his client, Mrs. Paradine. He almost works his life, his time, and he enters in attempting to win her acquittal by laying the murder of her husband at the door of his valet, who is her lover. Italian star Yvonne de Carlo, who plays Mrs. Paradine, and Louis Jourdan, who plays the valet, are excellent in their parts. Selznick presented this Alfred Hitchcock production to invited audiences at two theatres simultaneously in Westwood Village, a trim modern settlement at the University of Southern California.

BAINTER GOES SOUR

Fay Bainter winds up a cycle of 21 consecutive sweet or elegant mother roles, by portraying what she describes as "a sour old nag of a mother to Ida Lupino" in Warner's "Deep Valley."

Tug of war between screen and stage

YET another tug of war between stage and screen has been fought and won.

Trevor Howard leaves the Old Vic at the end of the month and will next be seen in a film.

Howard is an independent-minded young man, unaffected by sudden fame, primarily interested in being a good actor rather than in stardom or money.

On the strength of two performances, in "Brief Encounter" and "So Well Remembered," he stands very high on the roster of leading men in British films.

Deliberately he has restricted his screen commitments to one film a year.

FLYNN'S FATHER

ERROL FLYNN is having a three-bedroom home constructed on Navy Island, Port Antonio, Jamaica, for his father, Prof. T. Thomson Flynn. The 80-acre island, purchased by the star last year, is to become the professor's permanent home when he retires in March from Queen's University, Belfast, Ireland, to devote himself to marine biological research.

PRICE OF A STAR

EVERY star has a price on his or her head. A star, to the people who own his services, is a property with a capital value in hard cash.

Latest example is 22-year-old Kiernan Moore, a few months ago unknown, now worth, in his employers' view, £500,000. But not for sale.

His star has been phenomenal. "Man About the House" is cleaning up outside London. "Minc Ovin Executioner" is packing London's largest cinema, the Empire.

A NEW "MACBETH"

MICHAEL REDGRAVE could probably have had all the film starring roles he wished after his performance in "Fame is the Spur." Instead, he preferred to return to the theatre.

He is now rehearsing for "Macbeth" with Ena Burrill. This production promises to start a pretty controversy, Norris Houghton, the American director, says he is introducing a number of "innovations." He has seen only one "Macbeth" before, so is bringing a fresh mind to the job, unbothered by any traditions.

B. G. AND BAC

THE BOGARTS, better known as Humphrey (tough guy) Bogart and Lauren (the Look) Bacall, have no plans to continue indefinitely their successful screen association. "We will make pictures together," said Bogart in an interview, "only when the right stories come along."

The Stars Come To Earth

HOLLYWOOD. IN the hills above Hollywood big white letters spell out "Olywoodland." The nitch has dropped down, and nobody has bothered to replace it.

That is symbolic of Hollywood today. For something is certainly missing in Hollywoodland. And most particularly its once famous opulence.

With the vital British market gone, and with the public at home proving, by staying away from the cinemas, that they are getting tired of synthetic drama, the dollars have come to mean something in Hollywood for the first time since it turned glamour from a noun into an industry.

Whether in the studio or the household, economy is now the order of the day. For example, the biggest star in "The Paradine Case" is over Barbara Stanwyck's wedding dress. It cost £500, and she wore it in a scene lasting exactly three seconds.

For example:

GREER GARSON could not afford to buy the gown worn in her last picture.

In the household, Van Johnson, who was laid off just after becoming a father for the first time, is cutting his domestic staff because, so he says, he does not know where his next mortgage payment is coming from. "That is how most of the stars talk nowadays, and not through their Press agents. It does not matter that they are hardly affected by the great Hollywood depression. The stars, all 125 of them, are mostly under contract. Even if they were not, the moguls who devised the star system would use them, because they are convinced that is the only way to make money.

Clark Gable, for instance. If he never worked again he could live in luxury for the rest of his life, and yet he is constantly talking of his anxieties about the future.

Lucretia Borgia, most successful star of the moment, says she cannot afford to make any more films. She got about £15 a week in Hollywood.

Ginger Rogers, who has not got a contract but is still worth £75,000 a year, has equipped herself with an entirely new set of agents to get

For example:
JOAN CRAWFORD is auctioning her flat in Manhattan to save the money her a play on Broadway and radio engagements—just in case.

My favourite economy story deals with a lover's welcome for his sweetheart, a singing starlet named Marilyn Maxwell. Deen Elliott, a composer, planned to rent a sky-writing plane to dupe the skies with "Welcome, Marilyn" as she stepped off the train.

When he found the sky-writers charged £600 a letter, he cut down his message to "Hi, Max."

The newer stars are the most desperate. One studio has just announced it is saving £50,000 a picture by using unknown stage and radio actors in place of its secondary stars. And that has started an annual rush which has the insurance companies working overtime.

Jack Carson is mounting that he can get out of a contract for a £6,000 swimming pool he ordered last autumn. Yvonne de Carlo has cashed off on a personal appearance tour to make up the expenses for a bus trip to Europe. Jean Hersholt has turned down another picture offer to raise £250,000 for a special relief fund for out-of-work actors and actresses.

BANKRUPT CLUBS

THE Sunset Strip, a two-mile section of Hollywood occupied almost entirely by night clubs, is now known as the Rue de la Poor. Night clubs are going bankrupt at the rate of three a week here.

Those which are still open are patronised only by tourists, and they are complaining now that they never see what they came for—the stars. It is so unusual for film people to dine out that when they see them even the Hollywood columnists look for a reason. With the arrival of the "simple life" there is a moonlight-and-roses atmosphere about Hollywood. Everyone, even if he is making £150,000 a year, is finished with the material things of life.

Tyrone Power, who gave up Lana Turner to fight Communism, cannot wait to be on his journeys again—to Scandinavia this time—to spread the good American word.

"Tough guys" like Wayne Morris want to play clergymen parts. Edward G. Robinson moans how unjust it is for people to say he is a Communist. Paulette Goddard gives out an interview in which she says that, after seeing the miseries of Europe, jewels, clothes, and cars mean nothing to her.

NEW SHOWS:

TAKE YOUR CHOICE

IF you have not seen the inside of a big film studio, Paramount will take you on a conducted tour in VARIETY GIRL, at the Queen's. It is a kind of reminder advertising: there is a slender story which permits the introduction of as many of the company's stars, producers and directors as possible.

More than 30 of them appear. And a mammoth cabaret show at the end serves to bring on those previously left out.

Like most all-star shows, this one is far too long. But some of it is extremely funny. You will all have your favourite stars and moments: my choice is a polling room between those dear old pals Bob Hope and Bing Crosby, and a not-too-literal glimpse of how the sound effects are put into film cartoons. Incidentally, the director, George Marshall, and the veteran Cecil B. de Mille, act nearly as well as the stars themselves.

MUSIC AND MISERY

Music and misery are married once again in HUMORESQUE, at the Lee Theatre.

John Garfield becomes a famous violinist through the influence of a rich, thrice-married, beautiful brandy-soak, impersonated with stern poise by Joan Crawford. Garfield resents her help, but falls in love with her.

Romance brings little rapture and a great many rows. So Miss Crawford quaffs a drink, comes while listening to her protegee playing "Tivoli" on the radio, decides there is no future for the pair of them, and walks firmly into the sea.

The general torment of the tale is relieved by the excellence of the violin music, which for once isn't chopped up like a baby's food for easy consumption. Alas Garfield and Miss Crawford act admirably, and the pianist-wit Oscar Levant contributes a mordant-ly epigrammatic sketch.

Long skirts seem to have got the women hemming and the men hawking.

You're getting old if you watch your food instead of the waitress.

Marriage often ends on the rocks because both the mates want to be captain.

Nobody knows how the nations would range themselves for the next war, but there is certain to be a lot of jockeying for position to get on the losing side.

"No, he gets a straight salary."

A pessimist is one who has listened to an optimist.

"Thrift is a wonderful virtue," says a magazine writer. Particularly in an ancestor.

He: What for?

A LETTER FROM PARIS

The Crisis is all a matter of confidence

BY SAM WHITE

PLANNING for France's recovery is rather like trying to cook an omelette on board a wildly rocking boat. The ingredients are both excellent and plentiful, the skill of the chef is unrivalled, but despite the many eggs that have been broken since the Liberation, the result is always more like scrambled eggs.

Now a fresh batch of eggs have been broken and a new batch made with a series of financial reforms. What are the chances of success this time?

French economists are almost unanimous that success is assured—it only the boat stops rocking for long enough.

Fundamentally, they point out, France's crisis is far less serious than Britain's. The basis for France's recovery has already been laid in a remarkable industrial effort which has brought production to its pre-war level—despite war damage and strikes. The difference between France and Britain, they say, is that Britain must export to live, whereas France must export to live well.

MONTHS OR YEARS?

In short, the French crisis is little more than a crisis of confidence. Restore confidence in the Government and their currency, say the economists, and recovery would be a matter of months instead of years. And to restore confidence means tackling the problem of French inflation at its root—the peasants with money to burn who, distrusting the currency because they cannot buy anything of value with it, are therefore driven to hoarding and the wildest profiteering.

To meet the situation the Government have announced in quick succession a series of sweeping financial measures: (1) devaluation; (2) the establishment of a free market in gold, dollars and Portuguese escudos; and (3) the invalidation of 5000-franc notes.

The next few weeks will decide the fate of these measures and with it the fate of French democracy. What will be taking place will be an unexpected kind of financial referendum with the franc as the universal ballot paper. And during this period the French Government will be keeping their fingers crossed in the hope that those who prefer their eggs scrambled will have neither the opportunity nor the strength to rock the boat.

THE MAYER PLAN

Leaving out political considerations, economists here are convinced that the Mayer plan—which is, in fact, the work of France's most distinguished economist, M. Jean Monnet—can succeed. This is how they argue. First, devaluation will put the French ex-

THE STRANGER ON THE EDGE OF PARADISE

TRAVEL east into the Caribbean Sea for about a hundred miles from Nassau and, sea in the shadow blue ocean, you will find Spanish Wells, an island two miles long and a few hundred yards wide, which is the home of 750 honest, pious people, all of them white.

Here you are in the West Indies, yet here no black man or woman is allowed to live.

White folk have passed their days on this island in strange, peaceful isolation for 300 years.

There is no adequate record of their origin. Some will tell you their forefathers fled from the religious intolerance of England.

Some say they are descended from pirates.

But they all agree the original settlers—whatever they were—pledged themselves to preserve the island for their own race, and not even to employ black slaves.

To that vow succeeding generations have remained faithful.

Intermarriage has left the island with only a handful of names.

One family—the Pinders—includes more than 500 people, or three out of every four in the place.

When the Newbolts, the Sawyers, the Higgses, and the Sands have been counted, too, you have practically completed the census.

The islanders claim they are the world's happiest community.

No rich, no poor

Certainly Spanish Wells has missed a lot of trouble. There is no big house on the island and there is no hotel. There are no rich people, nor are any poverty-stricken.

There are homes, food, and work for all. Every man owns the house he lives in.

There are no taxes to pay, for these people need no public services to sustain them. They believe in individualism.

Politically they form part of the Bahamas colony, but their Government in Nassau neither interests them nor has any real impact on their lives.

They are content, and they ask only to be allowed to get along in their own way.

Their island home is a rocky, barren place where palm trees and little else grow.

So the farmers go to work by boat across a narrow sound to neighbouring Eleuthera, where the temperate climate produces good crops of tropical fruit and vegetables.

The fishermen—who make more money than anybody else—go off for a fortnight at a time, returning with heavy catches they sell all over the West Indies.

The traders either keep stores on the island or travel around the Caribbean with their goods in small boats.

Rain stored

At home, life is simple, much of it primitive.

An electricity power station has recently been built, and some households have accepted the benefits of this new-fangled idea. But lamps are still preferred in many of the austere furnished wooden houses.

There is no water supply, so rain has to be collected and stored in large cisterns. An ice-making plant, lately opened, has been closed down, for nobody wanted it.

Until a few months ago there was no doctor on the island. And few of these white people have ever seen a dentist.

Interest in the outside world is confined almost entirely to weather reports broadcast from Nassau.

There is no cinema or other public entertainment, but the islanders get adequate enjoyment at night out of two hours with a hymn book.

Women rarely leave Spanish Wells, and men go only occasionally to Nassau to buy stores.

Home cures

Twice a week Postman Blois Higgs, who is also policeman, Customs official, and immigration authority, sets out with a bundle of letters.

The islanders don't think much of correspondence as a habit. So sometimes half the mail is addressed to the doctor; a young Canadian called

JOHN DOUGLAS takes you on a fact-finding tour of the Bahamas island of Spanish Wells, whose every inhabitant is a white man. Picture looks from the headland half a mile across the water to the island

Murray Stevenson, who was persuaded to go to the island.

And now that he is there he finds many of his potential customers prefer their own home cures to his medicine.

They even cure something they call cancer, but the doctor week there is always something doing, except on Wednesdays, when there is a night off from church activity.

In the island school, with its one teacher for 150 children, there is a strong bias on Biblical subjects. Any ten-year-old child will tell you how old Job was when he died twice as quickly as he can add six and six.

This is how the children have always been brought up, and the islanders will stand for no interference with the curriculum or with any of their other traditions.

A new minister found that out at the last funeral, when the congregation rebelled against him at the graveside for trying to stop their hymn-singing.

He considered music was not in keeping with the solemnity of burial, and he said so.

But the people would have none of it.

So, in defiance of the parson, they chorused their farewell:—
"In the sweet by and by
We shall meet on that beautiful shore."

With its white sands and gaily coloured houses, Spanish Wells looks the dream island ripe for invasion and enrichment as a tourist centre. But it never will be.

The man on the headland has got as near as any outsider can.

It seems I'm a Man of the Bronze Age

... 'BRACHYCEPHALIC'
says CHAPMAN PINCHER

THE housing situation being what it is, Mr Chapman Pincher and I took time off to look over some caves in the Mendip Hills area of Somerset.

At one time this was the Mayfair of Britain, where the most exclusive caverns had their homes and, as it looks as if some of us may be back to that sort of life again pretty soon, you may care to know what living conditions were like.

One of the properties we saw is called the Hyena Den, and some people say it is the oldest known habitation in the country. It was converted into a residence during the late Pleistocene Period, 60,000 years ago, when the climate here was sub-tropical and Britain was joined to France.

The Thames was a tributary of the Rhine then, and you got tigers instead of fish on the Dogger Bank.

The technique

AS there were no house agents the first inhabitants were squatters, who took over the cave from a bear. The technique of taking a cave from a bear is to wait till the family is out and then nip in and light a fire in the doorway.

When they come back the father bear says: "Who's been sitting in my cave?" and the mother bear and the baby bear say the same thing, but as they are all afraid of the fire they go away and Goldilocks doesn't have to jump through the window.

The trouble with this system was that the dispossessed bears didn't like it, and they'd hang around for years just waiting for the fire to die out when everyone was asleep. Then they'd go in, and that would be the end of the squatters.

This happened six times in the Hyena Den. Six times the people moved in and six times the tenancy was terminated, sometimes without notice.

SIDE GLANCES

By Galbraith

"Well, if Dinkoy Jones's mother is almost ready to let him smoke, just tell him your parents almost gave you permission too!"

For company they had elephants, hippos, tigers, lions, hyenas, and bears. Then the great Ice Age came—the last of four in the world's history. The cold drove away the sub-tropical animals, and in their places came herds of new creatures from the north—mammoths, woolly rhinoceroses, bison, reindeer and giant cave bears.

The Ice came down as far as the Thames, but missed out the Mendips. Man struggled on, shivering in his caves, but he had to change his whole way of life, for the cold killed the plants on which he had lived and drove him to take up meat.

On the hunt

THERE was plenty of good food in a mammoth, but the trouble was getting it. So these early Stone Age men developed a neat little trick that may have been copied from the wolves. They formed themselves into human packs and drove the mammoths and other beasts over a precipice.

Bones found in the Hyena Den show the splinters and cracks sustained in the fall. After a few more thousand years even the unrational mammoths began to run out.

Just above the Hyena Den is another cave called the Badger Hole. Mr. Balch and a band of voluntary helpers are working in it now, and although it was occupied for centuries Mr. Balch has found there the cooked remains of only two mammoths—an old cow and a baby.

In a way this was the beginning of civilisation in Britain. The cave men were forced to take up agriculture, and the shortage of fur coats for the women led to the introduction of spinning and weaving.

The first inhabitants of these caves were called Palaeolithic men. It means "Old Stone Age." Their successors were called Neolithic which means "New Stone Age."

Neolithic men polished their stone weapons as if they were metal, and learned how to plough and keep animals.

The country was getting warmer, and a new lot of men came up from the south. The newcomers had broad heads and could work soft metal. They began to come about 4,000 years ago, and the civilisation they introduced is called the Bronze Age.

While telling us this, Mr. Balch kept glancing at me with a critical eye, and eventually said: "You know, you are a perfect example of a Bronze Age man yourself. Just the right build and head dimensions."

So I take a family interest in the Bronze Age now. We were the original Ancient Britons that the Romans found when they landed, and grand-dad threw a very pretty spear.

The junk-filled Hyena Den and the Badger Hole weren't good enough for my family. So we crossed the River Axe about 250 B.C. and moved into a more sumptuous cave known as Wookey Hole, where we stayed for 700 years.

Running water

AS cave dwellings go this ancestral home of ours was a regular palace. We had a southerly aspect, 450 ft. of roof over our heads, and a chimney that carried away the smoke. There was running water in the cellar, and natural air-conditioning kept the temperature at an even 51 degrees summer and winter.

If it was snowing and we didn't want to go out we could move to one of the chambers at the back and catch fresh water shrimps for tea. ("Gammarus pulex," said Mr. Pincher, who fished one out.)

Sometimes I am sorry we ever left Wookey. We got on all right with the Romans and entertained many a C.I. legionary, but we couldn't stand the Saxons who came after them. They kept accusing us of stealing their cattle.

So we moved to the Welsh Hills and, later on, to Hampshire. But, if the atom-war comes, I think we'll go back.

PARTY FOR POOR CHILDREN

SPC treats 1,000
to Cinema

LAST Tuesday and Wednesday, over 1,000 of the Colony's children were smiling as they hugged new toys.

At its first party for underprivileged children, the Women's Auxiliary of the Society for the Protection of Children treated small children and their mothers to a Mickey Mouse Cinema. Afterwards, the children were given sweets and toys collected by the local school children. Mothers received a tin of milk, wash cloths and babies' clothes.

On Tuesday morning, The Central Theatre presented the movie to all the children from the SPC's Western Welfare Centre, who streamed into the theatre for what was for many their first moving picture.

Children from the Tai Hing Centre crowded the Lee Theatre on Wednesday morning for their party, which also included Mickey Mouse, toys and sweets. After the performances the children rushed out of the theatres showing their new toys to their friends and smiling with delight.

Members of the Women's Auxiliary who were present felt that the parties had been a

Tickets for the show were donated by the Local Printing Press Ltd., The China Emporium, Wing On, The Sincere Co., the Sun Co. and Shui Hing Co. donated part of the 1,500 toys. The remainder was collected by school children attending the Kennedy Road, Quarry Bay, Anglo-French Convent, Kowloon Junior and Diocesan Girls' Schools.

SCHIPARELLI'S SURREALISM

PARIS. Surrealist. Hats alone are from a world we do not know in London.

"WHAT could be more heartening to a world in a crisis than a face veil all tumbled over with roses... a hat of thatched straw with a sweet william blooming on its brim?" asks Schiaparelli, describing her new spring fashion collection here.

The Schiaparelli show is not only stimulating to the point of shock: at times it is purely

If you find a nice English lawn and trowel up for yourself a chunk of turf dotted with winter flowers, placing it carefully on a slab of straw, you will have a new spring hat à la Schiap—the "flower-bed hat."

There is a green spotted jockey cap in brown shantung, worn with one of the many riding skirts that flare out at the back and are all 7in. from the ground.

Beach hat or hut?

There are face-framing sou'-wester hats with a fluted brim 18in long at the back, peaked-brim berets with puffed crowns of muslin, and spoon-shaped straws and felts.

There is even a beach hat in dull red shaped like a thatched native hut from the Congo.

Other Schiaparelli shocks include pink nylon stockings, shoes made of straps from toe to ankle, wired and strapless linen beach dresses (worn with pink nylons and straw slippers), back-to-front jacket with buttons and pocket at the back, crisp straw hats that look like a breakfast cereal, linen evening jackets, and what I can only affirm are false stomachs worn under flimsy summer printed silks.

Boots now fashion in Paris

From Marie de Segur

PARIS. Latest in footwear is the "bot-tillon" or low boot.

Attractive, comfortable little boots are made of leather, suede or felt. Sometimes they are bound with reptile skin tightly strapped about the instep and reaching two or three inches above the ankle.

For indoor occasions boots are made of velvet, embroidered in lame and paillettes, or of corduroy or satin, lined with fur.

Mantilla style

The Spanish mantilla of black lace has been revived by Christian Dior for evening wear.

It gracefully frames the face and is tied in a loose bow at the side of a corsage.

Wreaths of diamonds are worn on the shoulder or very low neckline.

A large spider, with body of one large Baroque pearl and strong legs with fine seed pearls, looks charming on the lapel of a severely-cut black tulle.

Pearls are also worn in "wire-netting" design, tightly clasping the throat.

18-INCH WAIST OF Mlle CLAVEL

PATRICIA LENNARD ON THE PARIS LOOK

PARIS. EVERY Paris dress house seems to agree that the ultra-feminine silhouette cannot be over-emphasised. One designer bluntly declared he uses "all the possible elements of seduction."

Models have discarded girdles in favour of longer corselettes that not only emphasise the bust and tighten the waist, but hold a snug roll of padding around the front of each hip.

The HEMLINE is stabilised for daytime at an average of ten to eleven inches from the ground and every skirt is full with pleated or flaring material, or drapery carried well forward in front.

Smallest WAIST at the dress shows belongs to pretty, dimpled Pierrette Clavel, blonde model, at the Carven collection. It measures 48 centimetres (18½ inches).

HATS are pert and pretty, the straws as crisp as breakfast cereals. Nearly all the chin or under a chignon bun at the back of the head. Prettiest is a new spring bonnet in coarse natural straw, lined with black velvet with a bow of long, black velvet cord.

No ear-rings are worn with hats. VEILS are important—either edged with petersham or sewn with multi-coloured threads. Some are heavily dotted with chenille and worn to a depth of 10in all round over large flat straws; some are bubbled with lightweight pearls.

JEWELLERY is played down a good deal; by day single string chokers and by night matching bracelets and necklaces of brilliants are worn. Piguet, however, puts tiny insect brooches on cuffs and lapels, and uses an unusual necklace of cabochons embedded with brilliants and slung on a gold chain.

FASHION POINTS WORTH NOTING: absolutely plain, beautifully fitting court shoes are worn at the best houses. Boat-shaped necklines that profile the neck and shoulders are newer than strapless bodices. White gullup embroidery and ordinary white stringing is used a good deal on linen and special occasion dresses by day and night. Tiny black and white checks are most popular for silk spring shirt-waisted frocks. The tiered skirt—from two to seven tiers pleated or flounced—is drawing ahead for afternoon wear.

When you think of clothes for the coming spring and summer seasons, make up your mind to get a long-term overshirt. It's a new fashion thought, all line expertly fashioned to accent your good figure. It's the answer to your problem of what to wear with just about anything. Generally, it has a little collar that shows neatly above a cardigan jacket.

Keeping up with the art and music fashion of the day, Schiaparelli has gone completely surrealistic. These hats with hanging red roses and horns made from green feathers are the latest of her creations. Paris fashion experts say that many of Schiaparelli's new spring hats have been inspired by the late Gertrude Stein's famous "A Rose is a Rose is a Rose."

BEAUTIFY NEGLECTED

ARMS, KNEES, SHOULDERS

ELBOWS, knees and shoulders really need beauty care and are too frequently neglected.

During summer your knees are on display when you wear swimsuits and shorts.

To smooth out imperfections make a lather of soap on your knees every time you have a bath or shower.

Powder some pumice stone and rub it on with the soap. With a bathbrush or nail-brush, scrub around and round. Finally, rinse all the soap off and massage with hand-lotion.

The same treatment will smooth heels that are roughened by wearing shoes with no stocking in summer. If your knees are knobby and really ugly, there isn't much you can do about them. Wear slacks instead of shorts and swimsuits with a brief skirt.

Tightly-fitting swimsuits draw attention to your legs.

The new longer skirt is ideal for you—keep your skirts a good four inches below your knees. You often hear a girl, meaning that she would love to wear strapless evening dresses, but can't because her shoulders are ugly—rough, and made more unsightly by blackheads. Here's a remedy: First cleanse shoulders and arms with cream, then cover with a towel that has been dampened in hot water. After a minute or so, and before the towel gets cool, remove it and massage with a little cold cream.

Wipe off all the cream and gently sponge on skin freshener.

Who will be America's next President?

CURRENT basic factors in the national economy, if continued through the year, would tend to favour the re-election of President Truman, according to interpretations by some government economists who observe the situation from a scientific rather than a political viewpoint.

Such an opinion is based on the theory that a Party change at the White House occurs after severe economic difficulties. It does not take into account other factors which might give the net advantage to the still unknown Republican candidate.

These would be, for example, the relative personal popularity of candidates, qualifications to handle the world ideological struggle, and psychological uneasiness about the future turn in the business cycle. The Wallace third-party candidacy also prevents any categorical estimate of overall electoral trends.

Economic Factors

Major economic factors which, it is thought, will strengthen President Truman's prospect of election are:

1. The present opinion is that a severe "recession" is not probable in 1948, since large European economic aid will make conditions favourable to both industrial activity and a high level of prices.

2. The relative personal popularity of candidates, qualifications to handle the world ideological struggle, and psychological uneasiness about the future turn in the business cycle. The Wallace third-party candidacy also prevents any categorical estimate of overall electoral trends.

3. A possible "third round" of major labour disputes could have political effects unfavourable to the Administration, as occurred in the months prior to the November 1946 Congressional elections.

4. The maximum Truman-proposed European aid programme could produce scarcities of certain vital commodities, disturbing the public.

The last party change in the White House occurred after the 1932 election, when the severe "deflation" created a popular desire for change and led to the triumph of Democrat Franklin D. Roosevelt over Herbert Hoover, Republican. In 1948 the country is in the throes of "inflation," consequently economic conditions and their logical political effects are not comparable.

World and national debt for farm and mine products is still active, and the national aid programme tend to continue this situation.

Prices And Costs

Offsetting these economic factors, which economists think tend to help the incumbent of the White House, in his electoral campaign, are the following considerations:

1. Popular displeasure over the high cost of living. On this point President Truman has already recommended control measures beyond the acceptability of the Republican Congress, which even though not enacted would help to protect his political position. Republicans allege that the Presidential messages on the price situation were intended for partisan advantage.

2. Both the short and long-term trends of the price chart are beyond possibility of certain prediction, because the business cycle has become global rather than national. The business public for months has talked of economic outlooks in terms of "boom-and-bust" despite the apparent prosperity. Price levels are now nearly at the 1920 peak. Disquietude over future economy might have some political influence.

Harry W. Frantz, United Press-Staff Correspondent, says there are factors which favour Harry Truman's re-election

3. A possible "third round" of major labour disputes could have political effects unfavourable to the Administration, as occurred in the months prior to the November 1946 Congressional elections.

New Deal Measures

National income in 1932 was $41,690,000,000, having declined during President Hoover's four-year term from $87,355,000,000 in 1929. It reached bottom in 1933 at $29,584,000,000, before the "New Deal" corrective measures—marked by banking reform and heavy governmental spending—began to take effect. National income in September 1947 was at the annual rate of $203,300,000,000. The higher figure is, of course, in large part due to price inflation.

The number of persons engaged in production for all industries including agriculture was 45,683,000 in 1929; reached a "depression" minimum of 37,188,000 in 1932; and is now near 60,000,000.

Total government expenditures, including federal, state, and local governments, were $10,220,000,000 in 1929, $10,588,000,000 in 1932, reached a wartime peak of $103,116,000,000 in 1944, and were $46,779,000,000 in 1946.

Proposed federal government expenditures in the next fiscal year are nearly $40,000,000,000, compared to the wartime peak in 1944 of $95,559,000,000, and $3,170,000,000 at the bottom of the depression in 1932.

The agricultural situation in 1932 was marked by huge surpluses of many products and by extremely low prices. Farmers in 1948 count on active markets, with record prices for many products, such as grains and meats.

With the self-elimination of General Dwight Eisenhower as a presidential candidate, the Republican Party has entered a period prospectively marked by deep manoeuvres and bargaining relative to its 1948 nominee.

Statisticians believe it is a mathematical certainty that the Republican nominating convention will be deadlocked on early balloting, and that consequently many states will advance names of "favourite sons" for bargaining purposes even though such individuals lack prospects of success.

Favourite Sons

Some estimates of state "favourite sons" (including New York's Governor Thomas Dewey and Ohio's Senator Robert Taft) are as high as 600 delegates. Total number of delegates will be 1,004, and the necessary majority for nomination 548. It is believed the maximum early count for either Dewey or Taft could not possibly exceed 400, while Harold Stassen's supporters maximum claim so far is around 125.

This creates a situation favourable either to a "dark horse" nominee or complicated "deals" among delegates. Party politicians in many states will therefore desire "favourite sons" delegations which, according to custom, can shift their votes to stronger candidates as balloting proceeds.

The coldly analytical opinion of some professional politicians is that Eisenhower's withdrawal will have the following:

1. It will give Republican campaign preparations for a more professional organizational aspect.

2. The immediate effect is regarded as favourable to Dewey, but as No. 1 possibility he will henceforth bear the brunt of opposition from other candidates, and his qualifications and potential capacity of victory will be severely examined everywhere.

BACK TO B.C.

THIS story gives a clue to the understanding of the whole exhibition. When Julius Caesar invaded Britain the art of India had two thousand years of history behind it, and beside that any European art is the creation of yesterday.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg is again actively mentioned as a compromise candidate. But some professionals think his foreign policy views are out of line with Middle West political thinking.

The Eisenhower withdrawal helped Governor Earl Warren of California by increasing the prospective necessity for compromise.

Speaker of the House of Representatives Joseph Martin and Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts will get increasing attention as a possible compromise.

There is a magnified interest whether General Douglas MacArthur will definitely withdraw similarly as Eisenhower.

Probables

Professionals think this is less probable as public opinion polls have not yet shown the strength necessitating clear cut decision on his part. Impartial experts think MacArthur has maintained a "correct" attitude by neither encouraging nor discouraging a political movement on his behalf. His remoteness from the current political scene tends to defer judgment of the future party attitude towards him. Republican politicians speculate that the following states will consider the submission of "favourite son" names to the Republican.

California—Governor Earl Warren, Connecticut—Senator Raymond Baldwin, Illinois—Governor Dwight Green, Indiana—Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck, Maine—possibly Senator Owen Brewster, Massachusetts—Choice among House Speaker Martin or Senator Saltonstall or Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Michigan—As Vandenberg declined, may submit name of Governor Kirt Sigsbee, Minnesota—Harold Stassen, New Hampshire—Senator Styles Bridges, New Jersey—Gov. Alfred E. How strong is the Communist Party?

By Charles Wintour

COMRADE Harry Pollitt has launched the British Communist Party on a new campaign of militant agitation.

Addressing his Executive Committee, he cried, "Make them (the workers) indignant at the one-sided character of the Government policy; develop the mood to resist cuts and shortages, the mood to demand wage advances to meet the rising cost of living."

This attempt to stir up discontent among the working people started, significantly enough, at the very moment when the Foreign Ministers' Conference broke down.

Some people may be inclined to dismiss the Communist tactics as contemptible and unimportant. They would be wise to study the facts before jumping to conclusions.

The membership

True, the British Communist Party is only some 43,000 strong. In 1944 its membership nearly touched 50,000; after that a steady decline was recorded until June 1947, when under 39,000 members were on the books. But a recruiting drive has now begun which aims to reach the 50,000 mark by the end of February; 2800 new members were signed on during the past two months.

The influence of this disciplined sect of political fanatics extends out of all proportion to their actual membership. Communists have burrowed their way into key positions in some of the most powerful unions, and constantly seek to extend their hold.

It was against this menace that Arthur Deakin, general secretary of the mammoth Transport and General Workers' Union hit out recently. "We cannot afford," said Deakin, "to allow the attempted infiltration and domination of the trade unions on the part of the Communists to succeed. The activities of the Communists in the trade unions are mainly directed towards the propagation of their political faith."

And at the biennial delegate conference of this union, held in July, roughly one-seventh of the votes were controlled by Communists.

This development is not confined to any one organisation. It has spread throughout the entire trade union movement. Last autumn the TUC met at Southport. Eight hundred and thirty-three delegates attended; between 60 and 70 were Communists, roughly one in 13.

The TUC now boasts 7,500,000 affiliated unionists, of whom even if the entire membership of the Communist Party were included, not more than one in 175 could be party members. So at this assembly the influence of the Communists carried at least 15 times the weight of their numbers.

In addition, Communists have been appointed or elected to executive positions in many of the leading trade unions. Best known, of course, is stocky Arthur Horner, the miners' secretary. Others include bluff John Horner (no relation), general secretary of the Fire Brigades' Union; Jim Gardner, general secretary of the Foundry Workers; Sam Henderson, national secretary of the Passenger Service group of the TGWU; and Wal Handington, national organiser of the Amalgamated Engineering Union.

This political record of the Communists also warrants careful examination. In the Greater London area, which contains some 10,000 Communists, they have managed to return one MP, two LCC councillors and nearly 20 borough councillors. Much of their strength lies in Stepney, where one in every 100 of the population is said to be a Communist. Other strongholds are Hackney, Southwark, Bethnal Green and Westminster.

Who pays?

How is this programme financed? A Communist must pay the relatively heavy dues of 1s. 4d. a month. An additional levy of 4d. a quarter is made for the General Election Fund. Unemployed and old-age pensioners pay less.

Last year the general income of the Party HQ, excluding the sale of literature, which roughly balanced the printing bill, amounted to some £23,000, a figure which closely parallels the income of the Liberal Party.

Yet, while the Liberals devote only £4,000 to "salaries, wages and pensions," the Communist Central Office pays out £12,400 for "wages," roughly three times as much. That the activity of the Communists is much greater is shown by comparing the Communist bill for "postage, telegrams and (sic) cables" at £1,450, compared with the Liberal £275.

The class war

As the aging Liberal Party with its glorious history, past service, and a noble faith in liberty and the rights of the individual rapidly declines into political futility, the ruthless and disciplined Communist organisation, already deeply entrenched in the industrial life of the country, is mobilising for a fresh onslaught of "class warfare."

Mr Deakin has given the nation a timely warning. He should not go unheeded.

GANDHI'S ASSASSIN

SYDNEY SMITH sends the first portrait of the man who shocked the world

CURTAINS of blankets day and night darken a small cell in this Indian police station, so that even the armed guards at the bars cannot stare in at another brooding little fanatic who has spread his name round the world at the cost of a great man's life.

Indians, in their grief and anger, seem to have forgotten already the 25-year-old high-caste Brahmin. Natturam Vinayak Godse.

He is a plump, unspectacular young man of medium height, with an oval, owlish face, the round protuberant eyes of a fanatic and high-pitched voice of a man who lives on his nerves.

Godse, son of a middle-class Bombay family, learned English and took his Bachelor of Arts degree at Bombay University, where he studied law as well.

When he left there he dreamed of one thing only—a nation of Hindus, with the suppression of western culture and ideology in India, and the complete subjection of India's Moslems to a Hindu Raj.

He boasted: "I have a mission to fulfil and I cannot become a liability to others." He took a paid job as a Hindu Mahasabha (Right Wing) organiser in Poona. Sometimes he accompanied the Mahasabha president on a tour. Early in the war he risked his neck by preaching Mahasabha propaganda in a tour of the 80 per cent Moslem State of Kashmir.

In 1944, with cash support from Mahasabha followers, he founded in Poona a little newspaper called Agrani. Forward it was printed in Mahaurati, and its Poona circulation, in competition with eight other Mahasabha local papers, soon reached 10,000 a day, which is quite a lot in India.

In 1946 Godse's bitter and provocative anti-Moslem, anti-Congress frenzies got him into trouble with the Bombay Government. A warranty of £500 was demanded from him against the good behaviour of his newspaper, which meant the money would be forfeit next time he prejudiced law and order.

Just before August 15 last year, as the great Punjab massacre was beginning, the Government demanded another £500 from Godse. Godse backed that by changing the name of his newspaper to Hindu Rashtra—Hindu State.

When the British went, and Congress and the Moslems alone were left, Godse increased the bitterness of his attacks against the India Government for what he considered its moderate policy towards Pakistan. Godse's views found growing support, and, only a week before he went to Delhi with a revolver in his pocket, he had bought a new press for £5,000.

His attitude was this: India belongs to the Hindus, who are its only true nationals. The loyalties of the Moslems go beyond the boundaries of Hindustan to the Pan-Islamic States, so they can never be Indian nationals. Congress has abandoned its national programme to placate Pakistan and the Moslems of India.

EVER since the first day when they began questioning him, Godse has talked freely, pouring out lists of names, which have sent police squads and troops with fixed bayonets raiding homes in Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Poona, Cawnpore.

What will happen to Godse? If his confession is accepted, and he is found guilty, he is liable to be hanged, but it is most likely that the Government will feel Gandhi's death should never be revenged by execution.

DRAMAS OF THE LAW COURTS

Gun drama in court that saved a man's life

After he said 'I have shot a woman'

by A. E. BOWKER

who was confidential clerk to SIR EDWARD MARSHALL HALL, K.C., the famous defence counsel.

ALTHOUGH Sir Edward Marshall Hall had many triumphs through his spectacular career at the Bar, the little-known trial of Edward Lawrence was one of his greatest successes.

The facts were these. Edward Lawrence, a Wolverhampton brewer, had gone to a Dr Galbraith about 9.45 one evening drunk. He said: "Come at once, I have shot a woman."

At a later stage he said: "Good God! She's not dead, is she? For God's sake do everything you can for her."

Then a little later: "I'm glad I did it. She is best dead. She drove me to it. You don't know what a wicked woman she has been."

From which you will gather it was a pretty hopeless case!

The woman was Ruth Hadley, with whom Lawrence had been living.

She was a barmaid. Lawrence was arrested and charged.

AN ADMISSION

Then a denial

On being charged he said to the police: "Murder, you say, do you? That's all right."

But later on, when he had sobered up a bit, he said: "Well—there's one thing. I didn't do it. You were not there when it was done. She shot herself."

So we have a dead woman with two bullet wounds, one in her right arm, one in her head; the admissions to the doctor and the police—true, made by a drunken man.

The man himself—reputation bad; character violent, previous convictions for savage assaults.

The trial came on at Stafford Assizes, and Mr. F. W. Sherwood, for the prosecution, insisted that the evidence was overwhelming, and that a verdict of murder was the only reasonable one.

Two sisters swore that Lawrence had shot at Ruth Hadley twice before, and had threatened to murder her.

Marshall Hall waited until Dr Powell was called for the prosecution to give evidence about the wounds.

This was the witness for whom our leader had been waiting.

The defence for the first time revealed to a breathless court that it was out for a complete acquittal and not a verdict of manslaughter.

It was during—in view of what we were up against.

Marshall Hall suggested that the revolver had gone off accidentally while Lawrence was struggling with the woman.

I remember the doctor's reply, "No, sir," he said; "her face would have been blackened by a shot fired at such close range."

THE REVOLVER Counsel's demonstration

There was a stir as Marshall Hall picked up the revolver.

He motioned to Mr Copeland, solicitor for the defence, who took the weapon, pointing it at Marshall Hall.

Suddenly Marshall Hall grasped the solicitor's right wrist and forced it upwards, showing that if, as he suggested, the accused had seized the wrist of the woman who was threatening him the revolver could have been accidentally discharged and the woman shot through the head.

It was a dramatic demonstration. But it did not move the doctor, who insisted that at such close quarters the woman's face must have shown some signs of scorching.

The prosecution closed, and the general feeling was that things looked very black against us.

Marshall Hall opened quietly to an attentive but what I felt was a hostile jury.

Instead of calling Lawrence himself as the first witness for the defence, which, if the prisoner is called at all, is the invariable practice in a capital charge, he called a number of others to prove that Ruth Hadley had been a woman of violent character and a drunkard.

Then, and not till then, when these points were firmly established in the minds of the jury, did Marshall Hall call Lawrence himself. He was taken through his examination with unerring care by Marshall Hall.

Lawrence told of his adventures in South America, and admitted that since then he had always kept a revolver under his pillow.

He had not bought ammunition for more than 20 years.

He described how he and Ruth Hadley had become heavy drinkers.

Coming to the night of the tragedy he said they had both been drinking, the woman hurling crockery at him when he told her she was drunk.

GUN WENT OFF During the struggle

He told her to get out. There was more quarrelling, and he got the revolver from the bedroom to frighten her.

"I fired wide of her, but I must have wounded her in the arm," he told the court, explaining that he did not know it at the time.

Having fired one shot, he returned to the bedroom and hid the weapon under the mattress, and came back into the diningroom, where Ruth Hadley was swaying about.

She then rushed upstairs into the bedroom, turning over everything to find the revolver.

This was borne out by police evidence, for they stated that the room was in great disorder.

Presently Ruth came down again, said Lawrence, and pointed the revolver at him.

"I could see the hammer rising, and I sprang forward to save my life," he told the court. "I seized her right wrist, and as we struggled there the revolver went off and Ruth dropped to the floor."

There was a silence in court, broken by a murmur of excitement as Marshall Hall said: "Take the revolver, Lawrence. Show my lord and the jury exactly what happened."

The usher handed the weapon to Lawrence.

He took it, and before the eyes of the jury showed on his own wrist how the revolver would inevitably point upwards when the wrist of the holder was gripped by another in the way shown.

It was clear that this demonstration made a great impression on the judge, for he ordered Lawrence to stand on the bench close to the jury, and demonstrate once more, this time with the clerk, Mr Moorman, holding the weapon.

Lawrence did so—three times, in fact, Moorman holding the revolver, Lawrence gripping his wrist and forcing it upwards.

It was a most impressive scene, and the court was spellbound. The man was literally acquitting himself with his own testimony, corroborated in so many ways by evidence already given.

It had been proved, for example, that, owing to a defect, the weapon could be fired without the trigger being pulled.

His explanation of how the two shots were fired was convincing. The bedroom with the mattress turned over and things in disorder all fitted in.

But the main thing, of course, was the demonstration with the revolver repeated over again and again.

We learned afterwards that there was a firearm expert on the jury, a fact which doubtless helped them to come to their verdict.

Another thing which impressed me was the apparent change in the disposition of the judge.

"It shows that it is possible for the shot to have been fired in this way," he told the jury, and I observed that from then onwards he addressed the prisoner as "Mr" Lawrence, and not just Lawrence.

SUMMING-UP

In favour of prisoner

With the whole aspect of the case changed, counsel addressed the jury. Marshall Hall went straight out and made a most powerful appeal for an acquittal.

Once more during his closing speech he handled the revolver to emphasise the point he had made with such dramatic effect.

There followed a favourable summing-up by Mr Justice Jeff, and the jury were absent only twenty minutes before returning their verdict of Not Guilty.

In acquitting Lawrence, Mr Justice Jeff addressed a few words of advice to him before he left the dock.

But so little did Lawrence heed them that within a few days he was charged with assault and fined, although I believe he was very greatly provoked.

BY THE WAY by Beachcomber

A STORY of a woman who met her brother after eighteen years and "hit him with her umbrella because he still wore a bowler," recalls to us who love literature the lines of Keats or someone.

We had waited twelve years for his coming. With "Welcome" displayed on the mat.

But imagine our rage when he turned up. In a little round wickerwork hat.

He was gentle and loving as ever. With a small bit of fish for the cat.

But the family just couldn't stomach it. His little round wickerwork hat.

No wonder the neighbours were sniggering.

No wonder our welcome fell flat.

In sorrowful silence we kissed him.

In his little round wickerwork hat.

Oh, was this what we'd prayed for and dreamed of.

In our loneliness? Impudent brat!

To return after twelve years in exile.

In a little round wickerwork hat!

Old days in Ahahaland

THE headman's chief wife is the most important woman in the village, with many privileges. She does no work, and is allowed to sit all day at the back of the kraal on a heap of baked mud. She is also the only woman who is entitled to have the largest size of ring pushed through her nose, and her forehead branded by a flaming piece of wood, as a sign of her exalted position.

She does not appear at feasts. On account of her rank she is given the ordinary, everyday food in her kraal, and a special squad of singers howl outside her quarters all through the night. If she wishes to take exercise she is carried on a litter of branches round and round the compound. If she rebukes one of her children, it is killed. If the child gets in first, she is killed.

WAR DAMAGE SHOULD BE PAID FOR

—By "Candidus"—

AND so the Malayan War Damage Claims Commission is at present in England for discussions with the Department concerned! No wonder the "Telegraph" employed the pertinent heading—"And How About Hongkong?"

How about Hongkong, indeed! How about those thousands of unfortunate Chinese residents, who were called out of their houses and shops at a minute's notice, and herded away over the Kowloon hills to starve or perish in China? They left their goods and chattels to the mercy of the Japanese and, in hundreds of cases, lost their all. The same applies to people in all walks of life—and yet, as far as can be gathered, there seems but a remote possibility of any reparations being made.

I sometimes think that we should have been no worse off had we lost the war. As far as Japan is concerned, the occupational authorities appear to be doing everything they can to make the lot of the Japs a comfortable one, but if Japan is to provide any measure of compensation for the damage and loss she caused, Hongkong has not as yet been informed.

If those who create wars are to be relieved of their responsibility to compensate their victims, then there is little deterrent. In fact, war is almost encouraged if the aggressor is not to be made to bear the cost.

THE trouble these days is that the Colony has no voice. The promise given that some form of self-government would be established is almost forgotten. We boast of democracy, and yet in reality we are the dumb slaves of an autocratic group system of party politics operated from London, which knows little of our special problems and expectations.

It must be admitted that Hongkong has no claim to special treatment, and in this connection one wonders what exactly is the Home Government's policy towards reparations.

In the absence of any concerted protests or representations, little influence can be exerted upon those who manage Hongkong from London, and the fact remains that we possess no body or organisation which could press the point of view of those who are called upon to produce the Colony's revenue.

I repeat the claim made before, that Hongkong sadly needs a taxpayers' association which would be prepared to place its case before London if necessary, and which would make certain that the Colonial Office was made fully aware of local problems.

Apart from property seized by the Japanese, or other losses caused by the invaders, there remains the fact that even the Hongkong Government has quibbled over restoring property requisitioned at the outbreak of the last war. Motor vehicles form a case in point.

IS it not reasonable to ask that those who filled in those impressive and hopeful war claims forms should at least be given an assurance that the matter is being pressed in the proper quarters?

The people of Hongkong, who have contributed to the Colony's revenue for years and years and who lost their all, have a right to press their claims; moreover, the Government bears the responsibility of presenting those claims with all the persuasion it can command. The question of Hongkong's case for reparations is not one to be covered by the stereotyped red-tape treatment, but by the strongest representations which can be made, preferably through Government, or in the last resort by the people themselves.

THE LAST OF AN ANCIENT SECT

The last dancing Dervish (Mawlawi) of Turkey has died in Istanbul.

He was 70-year-old Sheikh Sina-haddin Ozel who, as a young priest in Salonika, had whirled for hours with eyes closed, chanting praise to Mohammed and Jala Ud-din Arghunaram, founder of the sect about 1,000 A.D.

In middle age, Ozel left the priesthood, became a lay member of the Mawlawi. He started a successful matrimonial agency in Istanbul, was a justice of the peace and a town councillor.

BOOTLEGGERS IN THE PENTAGON

During the war the Pentagon, United States Army headquarters in Washington, was the object of many jokes because of its huge size. One joke was about a private who entered the building, got lost and came out six months later a captain. Now there is a real life Pentagon story. After six months of effort, guards have caught a bootlegger who was "smuggling" liquor into the Pentagon. He walked the long halls and washrooms, selling drinks and half-pint bottles.

SHIELD SEMI-FINAL TIES TODAY

KMB v Sing Tao Is The Big Attraction

(By "SEE TEE")

Senior and Junior Shields Semi-finals today; and a full First Division programme tomorrow. That is the week-end soccer menu following three weeks dominated by the Shanghai and Manila Inter-port matches.

The most attractive match of the week-end is today's Senior Shield Semi-final, in which Sing Tao (the holders) face their strongest challengers, Kowloon Motor Buses.

Immediately before this match, the holders of the Junior Shield, the Royal Navy's "B" team, also face a very strong challenge, from the Motor Buses' second string.

The Senior Shield Semi-final tie between Sing Tao (Holders) and Kowloon Motor Buses is one of the most attractive ties of the whole competition. Before Sing Tao were reinforced by the stars from Kitechee, Kowloon Motor Buses beat them in a league match by 2-1. That was on November 2 when Tang Yee-Kit, the Motor Bus and Inter-port centre forward, scored both KMB's goals. Today Tang, with the support of Chau Man-chi and Cheuk Shek-kam, is going to give Sing Tao's defence one of their most trying afternoons.

Sing Tao, on the other hand, can call upon an eleven which, on paper at least, is far too strong for any other side in local football. I would go so far as to state that Sing Tao's present playing strength should be able to beat a team drawn from the cream of the other league clubs. Four suggests a Sing Tao victory by two or three clear goals. But it is the probability that Kowloon Motor Buses may produce something out of the bag which will draw the crowds to the Navy Ground this afternoon. It is quite a while since Causeway was a cupping session.

Sing Tao beat St Joseph's (4-2) and the Police (5-1) on their road to today's semi-final. Kowloon Motor Buses beat Chinese Athletic 1-0 in the first round of the Senior Shield competition. In the second round they had a hard struggle to get the better of South China and they owe their victory in no small measure to the thrust of Tang Yee-Kit. After a goalless first half South China took the lead. It was only during the last quarter of an hour that the Buses snatched the game out of the fire. Tang Yee-Kit scored the equaliser and the winning goal.

WHERE WILL CHANG PLAY

It will be interesting to see in which position the Sing Tao selectors play Chang Kam-hoi today. On several occasions recently, both in club and representative matches, Chang has played at left half back. I hope to see him return to the forward line. Half back play places far too many restrictions for Chang to be happy there. If he plays at left half and indulges in his usual wandering, Sing Tao's left defensive flank is going to be the weak spot. The Navy "B" team, much weakened by changes from the formidable combination which carried almost everything before it at the beginning of the season, will be battling hard to retain their hold upon the Junior Shield this afternoon.

Their opponents, in the Junior Shield Semi-final which kicks-off at 2 p.m., are Kowloon Motor Buses' second division eleven. This should prove a very even encounter with the odds very slightly favouring the Buses.

The other two semi-finals (senior and junior shields) are also to be played this afternoon. The venue is the Police Ground, Boundary-street, Kowloon. In the Senior tie Eastern are to meet Kitechee. These are two exceptionally well matched sides. They have met twice in league matches this season. On October 2 Kitechee beat Eastern at the Club Ground 3-2. On January 11, however, Eastern turned the tables. In a most exciting match they beat Kitechee 2-0, after being severely taxed in the second half. But it was a day on which things did not go right for Kitechee. Kwok missed a penalty kick, skinned the Eastern upfield a little later and then finished up as a lame wingman.

Nevertheless, although beaten 2-0, Kitechee had much of the play. This victory of less than two months ago, however, will hearten Eastern considerably. Today's tie is one of the most open matches of the season. Eastern's road to the semi-final has been at the expense of the Buses and the Club, both of whom they beat 2-2. Kitechee's successes were over the Inniskillings 3-0, and 25th IA 2-0.

The Junior Shield semi-final which precedes this Eastern-Kitechee match is between the second strings of Chinese AA and South China. Both South China and CAA had to go to extra time to secure the verdicts in the last round. South China beat the Club's 2nd XI 2-1, while CAA beat the hitherto all-conquering Eastern 4-3. This victory is a great feather in CAA's cap, because of it they will start strong favourites this afternoon.

TOMORROW'S GAMES

Tomorrow's league matches are counterparts to games played at the end of October. At Soekunpoo the RAF meet the Inniskillings, but both elevens have changed much since the last meeting when the Airmen won 5-3. The other match between 25th IA and the Buses is the first meeting of these two sides. The crowds will flock to the Club Ground in big numbers for the two first division matches which are to be played there tomorrow. The early match, kick-off 2.30 p.m., recalls memories of St Joseph's striking 1-0 victory over Kitechee on the Navy Ground. The Saints are sure to extend Kitechee again, especially as Kitechee may be feeling the effects of today's cup tie.

Kwong Wah beat the Navy 2-0 at their last meeting, while Kowloon Motor Buses were too good for Eastern by the odd goal of three.

Softball Chatter By "Spectator"

Chief Interest Centred On Women's Pennant Struggle

Current interest is focussed on the Women's League as the end of the competition comes into sight. This week, Wildcats, one of the three of five teams challenging for the championship, have to withstand a big threat to pennant aspirations.

The conspicuously strengthened Canadians, their opposing numbers, may now turn out to be a stumbling block on the road to Pennantville for any of the three aspiring squads—and it could be the Untamed Felines.

The time, the place for the Wildcats-Canadian top-billing: Tomorrow, 2.30 p.m., CBA ground, King's Park.

Amongst the mere males, in the virtually decided "A" Division, two high-standard playing contingents clash to provide another attractive engagement. Big Bill Woo's hard-hitting Canadians are to vie for superiority with the Recreio under "soft-heart" Tony Gonzales. This tussle should prove to be a close fight and one of the best in the full card of League fixtures for the week.

Doc Molten's Wildcats have hung on tenaciously, although given a severe jolt when they had to concede a walk-over which has put them one game behind the Wahos and Madcaps. Aces, their rivals. They beat the Wahos last week convincingly, their tower of strength, hurler Dolly Brown, practically tying enemy batters in knots. Will she be able to do that to the Canucks tomorrow?

The Maple Leaf femmes have quite a forceful batting side, but Dolly is expected to be a match. For the offensive, the Cats can count on a good number of their nine. There is of course currently reigning Queen of the Batters Edie Babida. Then, Peggy Barros and Thelma Watson combined to spearhead the high-power battering Wildcat machine. Fiery skipper Cynthia Motta's bunting is another threat. She was once seen causing chaos in the infield with a deceptive bunt.

PAPER STRENGTH

The Wildcats look stronger somewhat on paper, then why is an upset by the Canadians not unexpected? There is this question: Are the Cats capable of slamming Big Chief Alice Mar's smooth, swift deliveries at will? She has returned to form. Backing her up is a reliable field and added to that, most of the Canucks can hit the ball—they may be able to do that to even Dolly Brown—who knows. Chieftain Alice herself, Ulian Khoo and Jean Lee

WILDCATS FOUR DOWN

Patsy Ribeiro banged the apple for a three-bagger and resulted in two Wahoo runs. Terry Noronha's neat dump pushed Edith Xavier home. An error resulted in Patsy Ribeiro scoring. The Wildcats were four runs down when they went in for their fifth turn at the plate.

There was then some sign of retaliation. Helen Ribeiro scored.

The Wildcats were 4-1 down at their turn in the sixth. Law of averages would have it. Thelma Watson, seasoned player, got things really going. She hit a screaming grounder for a single. The same "little" Edie Babida knock-out another. The old campaigner was on view: Cynthia Motta did it when she tried. She worked remarkably well to draw the first and only walk off pitcher Terry Noronha. That was a cool, important piece of work by Cynthia. Bases full, powerful Peggy Barros came on. The Wildcats had reason to be hopeful; Peggy can hit. And sure, she did. She slammed with all her might and

Wanted a Man to— RIDE, RUN, SWIM, FIGHT

By HYLTON CLEAVER

Any adventurous and ardent musketeer, rich in confidence, assisted in courage, may yet qualify for one vacancy in Britain's Olympic team. And he may find a field-marshal's baton in his kit.

In the Modern Pentathlon a British champion was Captain Horrocks. Today he is Lieut. general Sir Brian Horrocks, G.O.C. designate of the Third Army.

What is the Modern Pentathlon? In story-book theme it means leaping into the saddle to take an urgent despatch. The messenger covers a 3½ mile point-to-point course with sixteen obstacles, and imagines his horse then shot from under him.

OVER THE RIVER

Now he must run. He makes another 2½ miles over natural country, swims a strong turbulent river 330 yards wide. Faced by the enemy, he shoots his way out; when ammunition is exhausted, draws sword and fights a duel. What more could a boy of the right stuff ask?

Now you see why this event is fostered by the Services. It is the test of a soldier. Two of the likeliest today are Sandhurst cadets. Until they can be developed, the gap will be closed by regular soldiers who competed in 1932 and 1936 and are now on the 40 mark.

They were subalterns then. Today they are Major C.P.D. Legard, Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards, and Lieut-colonel V. Barlow, King's Shropshire Light Infantry.

CIVILIAN WILL DO

The Army do not want this to stay a Service monopoly. They call for the best in the land. The Director of Military Training and the Inspector of P.T. at War Office, say that if there is one ambitious, soul-stirred exponent of pentathlon skill in Britain who needs only the opportunity to swim, a horse to ride, some where to train, they will take care of him. He can be soldier, sailor, airman, policeman or civilian.

Our scouts have been to Stockholm. Best in the world are Hungary or Sweden. But of 52 nations entered for the Games only 13 have taken on the Modern Pentathlon; and only seven tried their luck at Stockholm. So all we really need now is a couple of strapping lads who are modern Dick Turpins, with the soul of Drake and the spirit of Shackleton.

the ball went to deep centre, resulting in four runs scored. It was Peggy's moment—well done!

The Wahos failed in their last turn at bat. It was a deserving victory for the Wildcats who, looking from all angles, played better than the Mighty Wahos. While the winners committed three errors against the losers' two, this proved of no significance.

CRAMER'S FEAT

In the other games of last week, a feat not expected to be equalled for a long time, was achieved by Madcaps' sensational find, the dashing American, hurler Doc Cramer. Not a single hit was registered by South China in their game against the Madcaps, who won with a lot of runs to spare—17-2. Too late in the season, Edie Marques has acquired another ball playing star—Don Teeters, who showed his worth with a 3-in-5 classy return.

It has been heard from bleachers on more than one occasion of the old warhorse, Saint catcher Harold Winglee, that he is a "no-hit wonder." However, believe it or not but it's the truth: He beat out three safeties in four trips for his team which whipped the lowly placed Rovers 14-0. Good work, Hal!

The Canadians banged their way to a 14-4 walk-over over the VRC. Tony Lopes apparently was in an unusual haze; he gave away 11 free passes—too generous, don't you think?

The Filipinos did not return to the picture with enough force against Recreio. They got beaten eight runs to three. Established batter of reliability all-rounder Gerry Gosano shone out in this fracas with a 100 percent batting achievement. He beat out two neat hits in the same number of attempts.

The battle of the joint leaders in the "B" Division turned out to be an easy over-running of the youthful Rexes by Daredevils. The Rexes swallowed hard with a 22-7 drubbing.

Tomorrow's fixtures are:

Men's "A" Division

CBA ground—9.30 a.m. St Joseph's v. Ellipinos. 11.15 a.m. Canadians v. Recreio.

Recreio football ground—9.30 a.m. Madcaps v. Rovers. 11.15 a.m. South China v. VRC.

Police ground, Boundary Street—10 a.m. Baseballers v. Police.

Women's Division

CBA ground—2.30 p.m. Canadians v. Wildcats.

SECOND EXTRA RACE MEETING

GOOD PROGRAMME ARRANGED

(By "THE TURF")

The Hongkong Jockey Club will hold its Second Extra Race Meeting at the Valley this afternoon. First ball will be rung at 1.30 p.m. and the first race will be run at 2 o'clock.

The programme consists of ten events and only nine races are confined to the drawing of Cash Sweep Tickets.

This will be the first meeting of the "new" ponies with the "old" ones and the outcome should be very interesting.

The main event of the day, the Newmarket Handicap, for "A" Class ponies, should prove to be a tussle between Daisy Bell and Ataman and it will be very interesting to note how the Derby winner rates against "Class" winners.

CATTERICK BRIDGE STAKES (1st Section)

The programme opens with a race for the 1948 Australian "D" Class and "Unclassified" ponies. The three ponies that will most probably catch the punter's eye are: Fleeta, National Gift and City of Melbourne. For a good outside chance watch Hynaline. Fleeta which came fourth to Meteorologist at the First Extra Race Meeting will have a strong say this time, but powerful opposition will come from National Gift and City of Melbourne.

ASCOT HANDICAP (1st Section) "B" Class

Anything can happen in this event for "B" Class, over six furlongs. Cooper with the nicotest weight of 159 lbs, should repeat his success, though now it has an increase of 15 lbs since its last outing when it beat Avalon in the excellent time of 1.10 under the good jockeyship of Donald Black. Hurricane (154 lbs) is a very speedy animal and if this pony spring out at the "go" it will be hard to overtake.

HURST PARK HANDICAP (1st Section) "C" Class

First Section "C" Class Australian Ponies of 1947 and 1948 will battle out this event of one mile. On the list of entries the old ponies in my opinion are a shade better than the new, but in a race like this, it is hard to predict which will win. I have a notion that the result of this race will probably rest between Shanghai Beauty (155 lbs) Never-tired (136 lbs) and Priority (138 lbs), with King Fisher as an outsider.

CATTERICK BRIDGE STAKES (2nd Section)

For this second lot of new Australian Subscription Ponies over one mile, National Glory, Some Fun and Sprinter appear to be the pick. National Glory (147 lbs) under a novice rider on the last day of the Annual Meeting was placed third to Blue Sky and Strathmarrara in a mile race, and now has a golden opportunity of winning as the distance suits the pony very well. Some Fun (147 lbs) with R. C. K. Chui up at the First Extra Race Meeting came fourth to Amazon and also has a bright chance here. Sprinter (152 lbs) with Needa up at the last day of the Annual Meeting was third to Sapientia, but it was only a half mile event, so I cannot recommend more than a minor post. Supersonics will be a danger.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP "A" Class

An equal number of ponies on either side (old and new) will be out in this main event of seven furlongs. Norse Queen, the Champion pony, will not be coming out so you can expect to see a very close and exciting finish. Ataman with 156 lbs to shoulder this time, will have to be at his best to match Daisy Bell (159 lbs). Shannon with only 139 lbs can be expected to give the above two a close race. Fifth Alarm (147 lbs) promoted from the "B" Class lately is in the best of form and may spring a surprise.

DONCASTER HANDICAP "B" Class

In this mile and a quarter event for "B" Class (old and new) ponies, Peggy with 150 lbs will have a big say and looks safe for a bet. This pony came second to Fifth Alarm on the second day of the Annual Meeting (with 150 lbs) over this same distance. Avalon with only 140 lbs is not to be ignored, for it can be sure of giving a very good performance. Lana (138 lbs) Desert Knight (138 lbs) King of Peace (138 lbs) and Pleasant Valley (138 lbs) are the new ponies worth watching.

HURST PARK HANDICAP (2nd Section) "C" Class

This mile race will probably result as follows: Airfield (159 lbs) Souvenir (147 lbs) and Fluke Shot (142 lbs). Airfield (159 lbs) with Tang Man-wai on the saddle came in a very good second on the third day of the Annual Meeting losing only by a length to Shanghai Beauty and should win this event though the distance is a bit longer. Shabina stands a good chance of causing an upset here for this pony has a very good last quarter.

CATTERICK BRIDGE STAKES (3rd Section)

For this one mile open to 1948 Australian Subscription ponies Ding How will certainly be the favourite for it has been running consistently well and is now due for a win. Shio-Marshall will undoubtedly be a menace as it has shown quick improvement lately, being third to Meteorologist in a mile race at the First Extra Meeting. The Dingo and Trade Wind will most likely fight out the third position.

ASCOT HANDICAP (2nd Section) "B" Class

To decide what will be the outcome of this event for "B" Class old and new ponies one has to go carefully over the entries. All of the ponies are more or less of equal standard. Among the old, Masterpiece (140 lbs) National Congress (144 lbs) Red Fox (140 lbs) Speed-away (154 lbs) and Sunshine (155 lbs) stand good chances of winning, while among the new lot, Arlington (142 lbs) Flying Jib (142 lbs) Rebel (142 lbs) and Windermere (142 lbs) are the pick. My selections for this race are: Speedaway, Sunshine and Windermere.

CATTERICK BRIDGE STAKES (4th Section)

Most favoured starters in this final event will probably be Autumn Leaf, Justice of Peace, Prince of Foxes and Wright. Autumn Leaf and Wright have both been placed fourth in a mile event, while Justice of Peace and Prince of Foxes have finished fourth but over a distance of six furlongs.

Arthur Peall says:

Hot argument followed when a free ball from leave shown at top of table. He protested that he could not hit any point of red, but the ball on the table, by means of a direct stroke, he was entitled to a free ball. Opponent contended that from position shown the ball on the table must be touching the cushion looking for a free ball could be awarded.

Since a common error, Striker has a free ball from leave shown in diagram. Since cannon direct from red to white is offered on right of diagram, but it is not so easy when you are interested in more than two points for the cannon. Closer ball control is needed as you manipulate a one cushion run through cannon, played to leave white up towards the top and double red across the table for position near middle pocket.

1956 Olympics For Scotland?

The Scottish Tourist Board has been informed that the Olympic Games Committee might welcome from Scotland an invitation to hold the 1956 Olympic Games in Scotland.

This intimation was made to the Dundee Lord Provost's Committee in a letter from the Tourist Board manager asking if Dundee would support an invitation from Scotland. Support of the invitation has been agreed to in principle, but Dundee authorities are making further enquiries into the expenditure such an invitation would involve.

MEDICAL SCIENCE TURNS TO HYPNOTISM

Dramatic cures with new trance technique

HYPNOTISM has come down off the vaudeville stage, out of the circus sideshow into the hushed, dignified halls of American medical science.

No longer regarded with either fear or derision, hypnosis is credited by the American Psychiatric Association with accomplishing "impressive results" in the treatment of patients suffering from a combination of mental and physical ailments—called psychosomatic diseases.

It first began to receive its new "legitimate" status when the United States Army became aware of its potentialities during the war.

SHELL EXPLODED

A German phosphorus shell exploded near a 27-year-old soldier. Though his eyes were uninjured, he was carried away psychologically blind.

At an Army general hospital noted psychiatrist Dr. Montague Ullman put the young soldier into a hypnotic state and asked him to describe his harrowing experience.

Then the psychiatrist told the soldier again and again, "You're cured. You can see again."

When the soldier awoke from the trance his vision was restored.

Later Dr. Ullman made more experiments on the soldier during subsequent hypnotic tests.

"You've burned the back of your left hand," it was suggested.

"A molten bit of shell hit it and glanced off."

To add realism the back of the hand was gently brushed with a small flat nail file at room heat.

Where the file touched the skin a whiteness immediately appeared, followed 20 minutes later by a narrow red margin.

An hour later a blister began to appear.

Next day the outer skin sloughed away from what looked like a second degree burn.

In three days the raw area had healed without a scar.

This and similar experiments so convinced tough sceptical Army leaders that hypnosis was something more than mere hocus-focus that after V-J Day 50 clinics were set up throughout the nation to help neurotic veterans make a satisfactory adjustment to civilian life.

The importance of the new alliance between the "black magic" of hypnosis and the "white magic" of medical science cannot be overestimated.

In America it is estimated that only 10 to 15 percent of sick and ailing have purely organic disease. At least 8,000,000 other Americans suffer from some mental disorder.

PAINLESS CHILDBIRTH

One of the most valuable uses of medical hypnosis is in inducing painless childbirth.

Both "formal" and "informal" hypnosis are employed in such cases. In the latter the patients are not put in a trance but merely, submitted to power suggestion.

It is this type of informal hypnosis which is gaining widespread popularity in the United States.

Much of it is based on the work of English obstetrician Dr. Granly Read.

Read's method had its first test in New York one afternoon in 1943.

In a New Jersey hospital a hysterical woman lay in labour.

A quick call brought Dr. Blackwell Sawyer to her bedside.

He had read only half of Dr. Read's book, but decided to try the method anyway.

The result was astonishing. With a few quiet, reassuring words Dr. Sawyer turned the screaming woman into a calm, co-operative patient.

NOT ON LARGE SCALE

An hour later, almost painlessly without anaesthetic, the baby was born.

The mother turned to Dr. Sawyer and said, "You changed my delivery from a nightmare into the finest experience of my life. Why didn't you tell me about this sooner?"

Hundreds of American women every year now turn to this technique and that of formal hypnosis to make labour both easier and shorter.

But formal hypnosis—putting patients into a trance—is not feasible on an extensive scale.

In other fields, hypnosis is curing children from stuttering, nail-biting, cross-eyes, and helping adults to give up smoking and drinking.

During the war, hypnotist Howard Klein even succeeded in extracting vital information regarding Nazi agents in America from a captured German submarine captain.

Since then, Klein has tried some daring new experiments on the human body.

In one of the most unusual cases Klein gives the subject in the trance two small cuts on the hand. Then, while they are bleeding he tells the patient to halt the bleeding from one of the cuts.

The blood instantly ceases. Klein then tells the subject to allow the first cut to bleed and to halt the other.

In an instant the flow of blood is completely reversed.

RESPONSE

Dr. Clark Bellows, director of the New York Institute of Hypnology, in an interview, contradicted the impression that only the weak-minded respond to hypnosis. He pointed out that idiots and imbeciles are impossible subjects whereas the "strong-minded" can easily be hypnotised, if they co-operate, because of their ability to concentrate.

Landscapes and other scenes can be improved by cropping to eliminate unnecessary details.

BE CONCISE

OFF HAND it is hard to think of a bigger bore than the chronic story-teller who stretches every anecdote with a score of minor details, wearing thin at once his story and the patience of his listeners. An anecdote should be concise, uncluttered by meaningless trivia. And, while we seldom class scenic or landscapes under the heading of "story-telling" pictures, such pictures too, can profit greatly from simplicity and conciseness. One of the commonest faults is the tendency of beginners to include too much in shots of this type.

Simple composition, in fact, is the basis of good scenic shots. To get such composition the most effective viewpoint should be selected for the camera position. And, often a part of the picture may well be cropped in the final print.

Let us consider the picture reproduced here; first, as it appears in its entirety, and then as it appears if we cover up the area outside the dashed line with two pieces of paper or our hand—cropping out the unwanted portions.

It is quickly apparent that the tree at the right adds nothing to the picture. On the contrary it serves to take emphasis from the lighthouse. Without it, the picture enclosed by the dashed line better conveys the feeling of loneliness which we associate with lighthouses.

Similarly, by cropping the top of the print, we improve composition by "raising" the horizon—it no longer divides our picture in half. This too adds emphasis to the rocky coast, the melting snow along the ledges.

All in all, it is easy to see how cropping has simplified the picture, eliminating those parts of the scene that add nothing to it. And, by eliminating them, it has focussed attention on the bleak prospect presented by a remote lighthouse in early spring.

FROM HERE AND THERE:

ANTI-POLITICAL POSTMAN

New York.—The race for President is warming up, but a Michigan postman takes a poor view of the whole thing. He admits destroying 100 political circulars because "there's too much of that stuff in the mails."

WHAT THEN?

Montreal.—Sir William Hildred, chairman of the International Air Transport Association, said here that he could not be satisfied until he could breakfast in London and lunch in New York. As the air traveller saved five hours in crossing the Atlantic it might some day be possible to leave London early on Saturday morning and arrive in Montreal late the previous Friday night.

THE THAMES SPARE BRIDGES

Johannesburg.—Spans from London's war emergency bridges will soon be carrying traffic across the Kafue River in Northern Rhodesia if the London County Council accepts tenders that have just been submitted. Londoners would gladly see the last of the bridges. None were bombed; they are still there, but closed with barred wire.

WHY FLY IT?

New York.—Sixty tons of gold, worth £50,000,000, will be flown to London shortly from Germany. This is part of looted Nazi gold now stored in vaults of the Reichbank in Frankfurt. There are 50 tons more in the vaults, making a total of £27,500,000, but it will be flown to America. An official of Pan-American Airways, awarded the contract to ship the loot, said he thought 22 flights would be necessary to fly the gold to the Bank of England and an even larger number to carry American's share over the Atlantic. Most of this gold was recovered in April 1945 from the salt mines in Merker, in Thuringia, where it was hidden by Germans.

YOUR NIGHTMARE?

Cape Town.—A man with a nervous twitch of the eyebrows was surprised to find himself the owner of a whale gubnet at a sale here when the auctioneer came to ask his name. Bidding on the whaler Hector IV, lying at Saldanha Bay, was opened at £2,000 and soon twitched up to £4,000, where bidding and twitching stopped until the whaler was knocked down.

MORE JUSTICE

New York.—The majority of America's child criminals come from homes broken up by divorce. That has given lawyer C. H. Morris what he thinks may be a brilliant idea. "Love pirates"—who steal other people's husbands and wives—do their share of the breaking up. So in Michigan, Kansas, he is preparing a suit on behalf of ten-month-old Bobby Wood. The baby will ask $6250 damages from a young woman, who will be accused of breaking up his parents' marriage. "If I can get it through the higher courts," says Morris, "we can make philanderers pay and help to halt juvenile delinquency."

NAB LUCK

France.—Riverside gambling establishments, already badly hit by the loss of foreign, and especially British, visitors, have all had a new setback by the government calling in the 5,000-franc notes. Takings have already slumped by a half, since the gamblers have had to turn in these notes and wait for the state to refund them. Three of the four largest gambling establishments in Nice are working at a loss, and one of three is reported to be closing down soon. Monte Carlo Casino has been steadily losing money for nearly a year, and employees are worrying over the latest report—that 400 of them are going to be sacked.

OLYMPIC PRELIMINARIES

New York.—London's Olympic Games have already resulted in solid bookings for June and July, two trans-Atlantic air lines reported. Pan-American plans an extra daily flight to London during the week. American Overseas Airlines will increase operating schedules by five flights weekly. There will be few, if any, vacant seats on any airline this summer. Plans to give American food for Britain's Olympic athletes is heartily endorsed by Charles Ormstein, food manager of the United States team. He will be glad to supply it. But he knows of no official British request. Miss D. Boeckmann, who coached the American women's team in the 1936 Olympics, advises the committee not to send a women's team to London. European women developed powerful physiques from doing men's jobs during the war, she explains, and they will sweep all events.

How Broad Are Her Shoulders?

WOULD you willingly place too heavy a burden on your wife's shoulders? Care of the family and management of the home are tasks that are naturally hers as a partner. Yet if she were suddenly left without you, burdens that are heavy when shared by both would be hers alone. How could she face them without an income?

There is a way to make sure that she would not have the added, crushing responsibility of earning money to provide the family with food, clothing and shelter. It is to put as much of your income as you can into Life Insurance and to increase the amount as your circumstances permit.

Life Insurance can be arranged to provide a non-cancellable monthly income that will never be uncertain—that fluctuating values or market upheavals can never reduce. Thus your heaviest burden will not fall on shoulders ill-fitted to carry the load.

Indonesia Victim Of Power Politics

BY MARC PURDUE

Batavia, Feb. 27.—A Dutch analyst says the East Indies are victims of postwar power politics. The analysis is unofficial, but it was written by a highly placed Dutch authority and widely distributed in Batavia in both Dutch and English.

The analyst says: "We are left with the tragic feeling that strong powers are deliberately trying to create an international situation which cannot possibly be defended either from a mortal or an opportunistic point of view."

The analysis was written some months ago when the Indonesian case was in its early stages before the Security Council.

It said none of the participating powers was motivated by idealistic purposes.

"It is quite clear to almost any interested observer that the alterations in the Security Council on Indonesia have no bearing whatever on the real interests of this country, nor on the general international interests which are admittedly expressed in certain terms but are by no means genuinely aspired to," the report says. It continues:

"The status of Indonesia involves interests of more direct nature than those referred to in the Security Council."

Asian Powers

The analyst points out that the recent development of Asia entails the emergence of Asian powers in the general international structure.

He says, inclusion of Japan among the great powers earlier in the century has inspired other Oriental countries to seek that role. He says that despite the failure of Japanese imperialism, "the initial success of their military action made an ineradicable impression on the peoples of Asia. They admit the complete defeat of the Japanese Empire, but they do not forget the possibility, created by an Asian power, of hegemony being obtained in these vast and densely populated areas."

"There are three powers that might take a leading part in Asia—India, China, Japan."

The analyst then points out that Southeast Asia is of "fundamental economic and strategic importance to any power desirous of coming to the fore in Asia."

China's Imperialism

The report says: "China regards itself—all of its inner weaknesses notwithstanding—as the oldest and far for the most important empire in Asia. From this, China derives an imperialism that though it does not employ the same blunt means as Japanese or German imperialism, is just as strong and fundamental."

China can never demand anything less than a position of complete leadership in Asia.

The report notes that the large Chinese populations of Burma, Malaya, Siam, Indo-China, Philippines and Indonesia "never sever the tie binding them to the country of their origin." They are "never forgotten by the rulers in China."

Of India, the report says: "The leading class in India is proud, self-assertive, and imperialistic. India's history has known expansion in various directions in Asia and Asia Minor. The present ruling class under the leadership of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru is playing the more modern imperialistic game." Associated Press.

LEGS SHOULDN'T BE HIDDEN

Women with good legs should not hide them behind the new long skirts, the Duke of Windsor said in Miami recently.

He said with material so short, it was a poor time to introduce styles requiring more material. Reporters noticed the hemline of the Duchess' frock was longer. The Duke said he was pleased with the reception accorded his memoirs, recently published. He might consider writing a sequel, he said.

A Street Car named Desire

NEW YORK.

It sometimes in London it is felt that Shaftesbury-avenue is a mere satellite extension of Broadway. It is an educational process to note how many British actors and productions are to be seen in New York.

Maurice Evans is filling the Alvin with a vigorous revival of "Man and Superman"; Malcolm Keen is one of the supporting cast. At the Beck Godfrey Theatre is playing his sonorous Antony to Kathleen Cornell's Cleopatra. Basil Rathbone and Wendy Hiller bring up the British total in a comedy called "The Heiress." Mr. Priestley's "An Inspector Calls" is earning hard currency at the Booth, and Terence Rattigan's "The Winslow Boy" has settled down to a success at the Empire despite the fact that nearly everything happens off-stage. John Gielgud is giving them "Crime and Punishment" at the National, and the D'Oyly Carte Company has opened to very large advance booking.

I WISH I could go on from that point and proclaim the superiority of the London stage over the American, but that would be neither courteous nor true. In the writing and production of contemporary drama Broadway is far more vital and courageous than London.

Let me quote as an example the enormously successful new play, "A Street Car named Desire," by a young writer named Tennessee Williams. Frankly, I do not know whether this play would succeed or not in London—probably not—but I would rate it as the best new play I have seen for years. The acting and production are worthy of the authorship.

The title of the play is garish, shrewd, commercially alluring and artistically justified. The play is set in New Orleans of today, a city once occupied principally by the French, who called its streets after the names of the wives or favorites of their City Fathers. Thus the street in question was probably called Desire and became Americanized into Desire.

At any rate, a street car, in other words a tramcar, runs on Desire Street but plays no other part in the drama. But somewhere on the street is a grim block of tenement flats.

There is only one set in the play, a set which is at once realistic and slightly fantastic. On the left is an iron winding stairway leading to flats above. Immediately on its right is the front door of the flat occupied by the young Polish-American Stanley Kowalski and his Polish all-American wife.

Having established the door, the designer then removes the fourth wall so we see the wretched living and sleeping room, the adjoining bedroom separated by a flimsy curtain.

tain and the bathroom on the right, which also boasts a door.

Kowalski rose to be an officer in the war, but reverted to his permanent status of truck driver, crude of speech, wastfully good-looking, cruelly tender, vain, melancholy, vicious, a killer at heart. His young wife knows all this and loves him, though she is not certain whether it will be a caress or a blow when he turns upon her.

SATURDAY nights are sacred to a game of poker with three of Kowalski's men friends. One is a dull 30-year-old Boob American who lives at home with his mother, the other two are just thugs of mixed racial origin. Stripped to their vests and trousers, drinking beer out of the bottle, leaning, swearing, quarrelling, finally Kowalski hurls the cards on the floor and three men rush out to escape the murder of his hands.

To this abode of love comes the wife's sister, Blanche du Bois. She has been a school-teacher but needs a change and has decided on New Orleans. She unpacks her wardrobe, which suggests that school teaching in America must be a lucrative profession. Kowalski eyes her with a panther-like disapproval. She is horrified that her sister should have married anyone so common.

Suspicious of his ultra-refined sister-in-law, jealous and resentful, Kowalski watches her enquiring his friend, the mother's darling. So Kowalski asks a fellow truck-driver who covers the territory to inquire into the past of this Blanche du Bois. Reports show that she was dismissed as a teacher and asked to leave town.

Glad to help, ma'am!

SAGA OF A SCOUNDREL,
by Pamela Barrington.
(John Long, 9s. 6d.)

BLAME SLOUGH, where I was born, for the entry here of that overplayed word spiv.

SloUGH, which was an innocent little market town when I learned to read there, has a new lesson for me now about spiv-literature. A letter from Mrs. Muriel Fairhurst, most emphatic of strangers, takes me for a ride.

"In SloUGH," writes Mrs. F., "Saga of a Scoundrel" is the biggest best-seller for months. People sit up all night reading it and there are long lines at the libraries waiting for it. So I thought to myself that here is a book, which every middle-class working man or woman will enjoy. Yet they will probably never even hear of it as it is not 'highbrow' enough to be reviewed."

Mrs. F. has something more to say about (1) this SloUGH boy; (2) SloUGH; (3) herself, which points her case.

1 "Maybe, Mr. Pudney, the book will not appeal to your refined and aesthetic taste, but surely you can bring a book to the notice of the people if it is something that they will enjoy?"

2 "We want more books by this author if we can get them. We are a mixed and not altogether illiterate population here in SloUGH."

3 "Office, factory workers and shop assistants are dependent on me for the choice of books. If you were responsible for some 200 people's books each week you would understand what I mean."

So I sat down to read Miss Pamela Barrington's portrait of a spiv, leaving the door ajar for my refined and aesthetic taste to retire with the cat at midnight.

Meanwhile, Miss du Bois is feverishly wooing the Boob American, feeling that it is a race against time. At last she brings him to the point, and in a scene of unexpected tenderness he describes haltingly how he had always dreamed that he would meet a woman with whom he could set up house and have a family.

"Could it be you and me?" he stammers, with his eyes lowered. She takes him in her arms as if he were a child and her face is lit up by a pathetic happiness. So he goes home to tell his mother.

The sister, who is going to have a baby, comes in, and Blanche tells her the news, affectionately, wildly, and with a growing air of triumph. Then, her nerves out of control, she tells the real story of her past.

Her early marriage was to a beautiful boy who turned out to be a degenerate and shot himself. Then, to cure the soul by means of the senses, she sold her embraces in the open market. "It was not just the money," she said, "some of them were kind, one was a gentleman."

HER fiance does not come to the Kowalskis that evening. To protect a fellow male, Kowalski has told him the whole story.

But as the three sit at the table Blanche is wildly gay. She dictates mad messages on the telephone to the "gentleman" who is on a yacht somewhere, anywhere. It is a yacht and the Western Union must find him. In the midst of all this Mrs. Kowalski is taken to hospital to have her baby.

Kowalski returns and tells Blanche to pack her things and get out. The scene moves from cold anger to passionate hatred. He moves to strike her and then, with triumphant cruelty, enfolds her unresisting body in a crocodus animal embrace. Whereupon the scene is tactfully blacked out.

The play ends with a rough woman attendant and a gentle psychiatrist arriving to take her to the asylum. She is convinced that the millionaire is coming, and is dressed in her tawdry best. The Boob American is there in drunken agony. Kowalski pretends to busy himself with a lighter.

The woman advances on Blanche, who throws herself on the floor. The psychiatrist motions the woman away. "May I offer you my arm, madam?" he says gently.

The poor little creature looks up and, then rising to her feet, puts her arm in his. "You are a gentleman," she says, and with magnificent discomposure, she has had to consort with whom she has had to consort. Kowalski glances at her and then returns to the lighter. The Boob American covers his face with his hands.

MELODRAMA? Certainly. A wild improbable story. All I can tell you is that I was held by it to the very end, that I felt pity and horror and fleeting beauty. This man is a dramatist.

Our English Jessica Tandy plays Blanche not as a slut, not as a blonde on the make, but as a vain little creature, at once hard and sensitive, an insect with aristocratic French blood in her veins. It may well be the best performance of the year in New York.

Mr. Marlon Brando as Kowalski deliberately mumbled some of his lines in order to give the effect of sultriness, and was quite content that we could not hear them. A dangerous device, but it lent force to his violence when he gave tongue.

Would London accept this play? Are we willing to look upon lust in a tenement flat or must we have it in a dinner jacket and to the polite rattle of a cocktail shaker? It is fortunate that I am only a critic and not like Mr. Firth Shepherd, an importer of American drama.

LOVE AFFAIR by Eleanor Farjeon. (Michael Joseph, 9s. 6d.)

HERE is a lady now who preaches to us the lowbrow theme of a couple "getting off"—in the good old-fashioned vulgar sense of the phrase. And she sets it in a highbrow period milieu of French life in the 'seventies. A rich, rare and readable story is the result.

Miss Farjeon, who claims to have had no education except for 8,000 books in the library of her novelist father, provides a delicate and devastating lesson in directness. Watch her face, the facts of love at first sight. See her trip past the sordid, laugh off the dreary.

It is as if the author reveals something stimulating which she has just noticed outdoors by swiftly drawing the curtains aside.

SOLVERS OF THE SKELETON CROSSWORD

word are required to fill in the black squares and clue numbers as well as the words. To give you a start, four numbers and four black squares have been given. The pattern is symmetrical. The two sides balance each other and the top and bottom halves correspond. You can therefore fill in 12 more black squares at once to correspond with those given. Since there is an 18 in the second line from the left in the corresponding one on the right, the solution word must be of 8 letters; this applies also to the corresponding word on the left, 8 Down. Words of less than three letters are not used except in phrases.

BENES ADMINISTERS OATH TO COMMUNIST CABINET

Prague, Feb. 27.—Czechoslovakia, in a statement issued by the Czech news agency, tonight replied to the British, French and United States joint condemnation of the political changes, declaring: "These governments have not the slightest right to intervene, even if only by criticism, in the internal events of the country."

"The more so, as these Governments are always talking of the application in international relations of democracy, one of the most important principles of which is non-interference in the internal affairs of other states."

President Benes today administered the oath of office to the new Coalition Cabinet formed by the Communist Prime Minister, M. Klement Gottwald.

"I wish for you and the nation that this way may be happy for all," President Benes declared.

The President broke his week-old silence on the political crisis when he replied to the Prime Minister's thanks for the trust he has shown in the new Government.

"You want to lead the affairs of the state in new ways and in a new form of democracy," President Benes said. "For a long time, I have been earnestly about the crisis, I have come to the conclusion that it is necessary to accede to your proposition."

Strongly Worded Reply
M. Gottwald, after presenting his new Ministers to the President, made a strongly worded reply to the joint Anglo-American-French note condemning the Communist action in Czechoslovakia.

He declared that with self-respect the Czechoslovak people could "reject ill-founded proclamations from abroad which are a danger to our liberty and parliamentary methods."

"We should not accept lessons in democracy and constitutionalism from those who are responsible for Munich, who bargained about our existence with Hitler's Germany and who wholly undemocratically and illegally tore up the treaties of alliance and friendship with Czechoslovakia," he said.

"On the contrary," he declared, "I repeat we can proudly say that we have proved again before the whole world the deep and sincere democracy of our state and our loyalty to the principles of peace and the well-being of our people."

So far, 22 of the 47 members of Parliament belonging to the People's Party (Catholics) and 19 of the 55 from the Czech Socialists have declared their support for the new Cabinet.

Purge Begins

The new Ministers are beginning work as the Communists continue to strengthen their control of the central and local government by the appointment of action committees which they dominate.

The new Minister of Justice, Dr. A. Ciepka, has disclosed a plan for a purge of "treacherous elements" and Prague Radio announced this afternoon that 60 officials of the Ministry of Information had been dismissed.

The Radio also announced that reports from action committees in the major provincial towns said people's meetings had called for various immediate changes among town and provincial officials. The action committees had taken it upon themselves to fulfil these demands, the Radio said.

The General Secretary of the Communist Party, M. Rudolf Slansky, forecast a purge of all reactionary elements from offices, economic and cultural enterprises, from all political parties and "all walks of life."

The Czech Socialist daily, newspaper, Svoboda Slovo, which reported in Prague today, published on its front page a proclamation by the party action committee to "all faithful members of the party," declaring that the party's leadership had "forfeited its right to lead."

The newspaper was one of those whose editor was dismissed during the week by the Czechoslovak Union of Journalists.

Other Changes

The proclamation was signed by 30 members of the party, including M. Josef Dvacek, chairman of the National Constituent Assembly, and the party's two Ministers in the new Cabinet, M. Slechts and Dr. Neumann.

The action committee of the Foreign Ministry today dismissed the Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee for Foreign Affairs, M. Ivo Duchacek, and M. Sodor Hodza, son of the late former Prime Minister.

Thirty-six Ministry employees have been sent on leave with reduced pay. 10 have been dismissed and eight have been transferred to posts of less responsibility.

The action committee will next begin a purge of diplomatic officials abroad. M. Jan Masaryk has given his consent to the changes.

The import of foreign newspapers and periodicals into Czechoslovakia will in future be the monopoly of the government-owned Orbis firm.

Carol Not To Meet Son
Paris, Feb. 27.—Possibility of an early meeting between former King Carol of Rumania and his son receded today with the announcement that former King Michael will leave for the United States on March 5.

Queen Helen, Carol's former wife and Michael's mother, arrived in Paris this morning and said she and her son will sail from Cherbourg aboard the Queen Mary a week from Friday.

Rumanian royalist refugees had expressed the hope that Carol, now living in Portugal, might get together with his son in organisation of a force that would put one or the other of them back on the throne. Carol abdicated on September 6, 1940.

Michael is reported to be in Luxembourg today, visiting friends with the young princess he is expected to marry, Anne of Bourbon Parme. He will come to Paris in a few days, his mother said.—Associated Press.

Brisbane's State Of Emergency
Railwaymen who fail to report for work on Monday will be dismissed. If insufficient men return to work the Government may call for volunteers to man the railways. The compelling of any person to state work is prohibited and picketing is banned.

Any person who commits a breach of the order in council may be arrested without warrant.—Associated Press.
Mr. Blain said that two days before the Japanese attacked, they were in full view on the other side of Johore Strait, within range of Australian artillery, which was not allowed to fire on them.
"The result was that later the Australians were mown down like rats," he added.—Reuter.

The only exceptions are newspapers of Allied states (by which are meant the Slavic states) and technical and scientific papers.

Prague Radio announced today that a "single united modern broadcasting service which would promote the ideas of the people's democracy" would be formed, merging the Czech and Slovak broadcasting services.—Reuter.

Bidault Warns

Paris, Feb. 27.—Events in Czechoslovakia have changed, the equilibrium of the international field, the French Foreign Minister, M. Georges Bidault, said today.

The problem of the survival of democracy and freedom had been brutally posed. It was not possible to think that these manoeuvres in the international field could continue indefinitely without producing a dangerous situation.

This was not an ultimatum but a statement of fact.

M. Bidault's speech—opening a foreign policy debate in the National Assembly—was frequently interrupted by Communist deputies.

"Frenchmen must realise that it is now more than ever necessary to have international freedom of the nation and liberty before everything else," M. Bidault declared.

The whole House, with the exception of the Communists, rose and cheered the Foreign Minister.

"Ten years ago," M. Bidault said, "the name of France like a danger signal, marked the beginning of Hitler's offensive. Certain methods recall a past." Here M. Bidault's voice was drowned by Communist shouts.

Brutal Prodominance

Great Britain, the United States and France had emphasised, M. Bidault went on, the deliberate character of a crisis which had installed a totalitarian party in brutal predominance.

Once more the sky of Bohemia had been darkened and an event of incalculable significance mocked all efforts for the liberation of Europe from a dangerous tyranny, M. Bidault said.

The Assembly will understand that the French Government, whose policy is founded on the defence of peace and of a liberated Europe, a policy defined by international agreements, should raise the question of this new happening of incalculable significance, which is a direct service to peace and runs counter to the efforts made to rid Europe of all tyranny.

"This happening is one of a series, the dangerous character of which increases by the degree to which the incidents come closer to us."

"Today we are concerned with a spot which is particularly sensitive in geography, in politics, in morality and in our memories."

Historical Precedents

"For long now, historical precedents have undermined the importance of Prague, but it was not so very long ago that the Czechoslovak drama was for the world a poignant signal of danger."

Here Mr. Bidault's voice was again drowned by shouts from Communist deputies.

"The hearts of men who love peace and liberty are gripped once more. The drama, no doubt, is now of another character. That which is the core of being and the pride of a nation, its integrity, its independence, are the object of an assault which cannot be justified by the systematic nature of the methods which were used."

Stating that the events in Czechoslovakia cannot fail to alter the international situation, the French Foreign Minister declared.

"It is not possible to think that such manoeuvres can develop on the European chess board without bringing about a situation which could rapidly become very dangerous."

"That is neither a warning nor a challenge. It is a cry of alarm welling up from the bottom of the heart."—Reuter.

Comintern Announcement

London, Feb. 27.—The Communist Party announcement at the second Comintern Congress in 1920 was stated today to be considered by the British Government as an accurate analysis of recent Communist tactics and strategy in Czechoslovakia.

A Foreign Office spokesman said: "The fixed aim of Communism is the destruction of parliamentary government. The Communist Party enters such institutions, not in order to do constructive work, but so that it may enable the masses to destroy the bourgeois state machine and parliament from within."

British policy towards Czechoslovakia was under review, the spokesman said. He refused to indicate what steps were likely to be taken.

McNutt Says No War Coming
Manila, Feb. 27.—Scouting talks of war, the former U.S. Ambassador to the Philippines, Mr. Paul V. McNutt, addressing Thursday's Manila Rotary Club meeting, declared: "I cannot believe that the civilised peoples of the world are going to commit suicide."
Mr. McNutt, who is now chairman of the board of directors of the Philippine American Life Insurance Company, added there is not going to be a war.—Reuter.

Strength Of British Navy Heavily Cut

London, Feb. 27.—The strength of Britain's navy, showing the heavy cuts in the number of battleships, cruisers, destroyers and submarines was disclosed by the Government today for the first time since 1939.

SPORT:

Ireland's Rugby Chances

London, Feb. 27.—If Ireland fulfil expectations and beat Scotland at Dublin tomorrow, they will carry off the International Rugby Union championship for the first time since 1935.

They have beaten France and England, and a victory in tomorrow's engagement would put them unassailable at the head of the table.

Ireland's forwards gave a great display at Twickenham against England, any they have been selected en bloc for this vital engagement, but two changes are being made behind the scrum.

These bring in Michael O'Flanagan—also a scorer "cap"—in the centre and Higgins, recovered from illness, to the full-back position.

Scotland, having overhauled the pack, found their troubles increased by the withdrawal through fibrositis of J. B. Lees.

Ireland won the corresponding fixture last season at Murrayfield by the only try of the match and in the series of 55 matches, their victories number 21 to Scotland's 34, with three draws.

WALCOTT TO SIGN
London, Feb. 27.—Marshall Miles, manager for Joe Louis, said today that Louis was "very happy" to hear that Jersey Joe Walcott would sign for a return bout at the Yankee Stadium on June 23.

"We had been expecting to hear that, but not so soon," he said.

Another member of the Louis party said he believed there was a pending agreement for a third fight between Louis and Walcott should anything unexpected happen, but he felt sure Louis will stick to his decision that his June fight with Walcott will be his last.—Associated Press.

RAIN HOLDS UP PLAY
Georgetown, Feb. 27.—For the third day, a start could not be made in the return match here between British Guiana and the MCC owing to rain.—Reuter.

ICE HOCKEY
Paris Feb. 27.—The management of Paris des Sports contacted Prague by telephone today and, notwithstanding reports in French papers that all passports out of Czechoslovakia had been cancelled, he was told by the president of the Czechoslovakia Ice Hockey Federation that the Czech team will play in Coupe Jean Rotin tomorrow night and would arrive in Paris in time.

The other competing clubs will be the Racing Club de Paris, Canada and Scotland.—Reuter.

Burma Applies To United Nations
Lako Success, Feb. 27.—Burma has applied for membership of the United Nations, it was announced here today.—Reuter.

WANTS U.S. FINDLATERS BASES IN KOREA

Manila, Feb. 27.—The establishment of American military and naval bases in Korea, as well as effective measures to counteract consistent Russian sabotage efforts in that country, was strongly urged last night by Senator M. Arranz, the Philippine member of the United Nations Korean Commission, speaking over the government-owned radio station here.

The programme was sponsored by the Department of Foreign Affairs. Senator Arranz accused the Soviet Union of undermining the Commission's plans for Korean nationhood, declaring that any hope for Korean independence is now remote.

The Russians have now put every obstacle to this programme, he said, that he had come to the conclusion that it is impossible to reconcile Russia to the programme of the United Nations.

The United States, so as to stop Moscow's Korean designs, should replace her conciliatory attitude with the establishment of military and naval bases there.—Reuter.

Corfu Channel Dispute

The Hague, Feb. 27.—Albania today declared that Britain's action in bringing her Corfu Channel dispute to the International Court of Justice here was invalid without a previous agreement between the disputing parties.

In the Carnegie Peace Palace, where the Court is holding its first postwar session, Britain is demanding compensation for the loss of 44 sailors and the wounding of 42 others when the destroyers Volage and Saumarez were crippled by mines in the northern Corfu Channel near the Albanian port of Sarande on October 22, 1946.

Professor Vochaz told the Court today: "The Albanian Government, in a letter to the Court on July 2 last year, declared that Albania was willing to appear but made definite reservations about the way in which the case was brought before the Court. But Britain went her own way," he said.—Reuter.

Food For Germans

Berlin, Feb. 27.—Nearly 243,000 tons of food were imported into the British and American Zones of Germany during the first three weeks of this month at a total cost to British and the United States taxpayers of £8,122,000. It was officially announced today.

Among the major imports were 35,650 tons of fish from Britain and Scandinavia and 8,205 tons of sugar from Cuba.—Reuter.
